AS A GENERAL GUIDE TO WHICH VISA YOU SHOULD APPLY FOR PLEASE READ THE FOLLOWING WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO THE DISTINCTION BETWEEN THE VARIOUS
DURATIONS OF MULTIPLE VISAS

Direct Airside Transit

Issued where a passenger transits the U.K. without passing through Immigration, (i.e. changing planes without leaving the terminal).

Visitor In Transit (6 months -Multiple Entry)

Issued where a passenger transits the U.K. and passes through Immigration, (valid for a transit of up to 48 hours) passengers wishing to visit family or friends should apply for a standard visitor visa.

Standard Visa (6 months-Multiple Entry)

The most commonly issued visitor visa. Students going to study in the U.K. will pay the standard visa fee regardless of their length of stay. This visa is also required for passengers who need to pass through Immigration and visit family or friends while in transit.

1 Year Multiple Entry

Only issued to visitors who can show a need for frequent travel to the U.K. and who have had previous successful visa applications at this post. Primarily used for business visitors. (A letter from the applicant's employer confirming the need to visit the U.K. on a frequent and regular basis will be required). Not issued for general travel/vacation.

2 Year Multiple Entry

As for the 1 year visa, but issued only with a prior history of frequent travel to the U.K. and a previous successful application for a 1 year visa. Not issued for general travel/vacation.

5 and 10 Year Multiple Entry

As for the 2 year visa, but issued infrequently. Not issued for general travel/vacation.

Beginning on 3-3-2009 the following rules will be imposed:

Visa checks are to be introduced for five countries after they failed to pass the United Kingdom's strict new Visa Waiver Test.

Following the Government's first global review of who needs a visa to come to the United Kingdom, visas will now be required for visitors from Bolivia, Lesotho, South Africa, Swaziland and Venezuela.

Already, three-quarters of the world's population need to apply for a visa if they want to visit the United Kingdom.

Widening the visa net is part of the Government's action to tighten border security. There is now a triple ring of security protecting the United Kingdom: fingerprint visas that lock people to one identity, a high-tech electronic borders system which checks people against watchlists, and identity cards for foreign nationals.

The Visa Waiver Test reviewed all non-European countries and regions to determine the risk their citizens potentially posed to the United Kingdom - in terms of illegal immigration, crime and security - by not having to apply for a visa before they travelled.

In July 2008 the UK Border Agency found that 11 countries fell short of the required standard. Over the past six months, the Agency and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have worked closely with those countries to improve their passport and border control systems. It has now been decided that visa checks are required for five of them in order to stop fraudulent attempts to enter the United Kingdom.

Nationals of Bolivia, Lesotho, South Africa, Swaziland and Venezuela already need a visa to work or settle in the United Kingdom, as do all nationals of countries outside the European Economic Area.

Now they will need to apply for a visa even if they are visiting the United Kingdom for less than six months. In the case of Venezuela, visitors who have new secure fingerprint passports issued since 2007 will be allowed to enter the United Kingdom without applying for a visa.

Border and Immigration Minister Phil Woolas said:

"The Government said it would get tough and we meant it. Already our shake-up of border security is delivering results, with three million fingerprints taken from visa applicants and 3,000 people caught trying to hide their identity.

"Today's announcement sees these tough checks extended to a further five countries.

"The message is clear - we will not shy away from widening the visa net further wherever we think there's a risk to the UK."

Additionally, anyone wishing to travel from Bolivia, Lesotho, South Africa, Swaziland or Venezuela to another country via the United Kingdom will now need a transit visa. The same transit visa requirements have been extended to Jamaican nationals wanting to pass through the United Kingdom.

Everyone applying for a visa to enter the United Kingdom is now fingerprinted, locking them to one identity, and checked against Government watchlists. They are then screened and counted in and out of the United Kingdom using the UK Border Agency's e-Borders system.

First-time visitors to the United Kingdom from South Africa will need to apply for visas from 3 March 2009, with the full visa regime there and in the other countries coming into effect by mid-2009.

The visa regime for Taiwanese passport holders will be lifted as a result of the Visa Waiver Test. This will take effect from 3 March 2009.

United Kingdom Introduces Biometric Data Collection for All Visa Applicants

UK Visas, 11/26/2007

Effective December 3, 2007, the British government will introduce biometric data collection (10-finger scans and a digital photograph) as part of a world-wide biometric identification process, designed to protect an individual's identity, facilitate future entry to the UK, combat visa fraud and abuse of the UK's immigration and asylum systems.

From December 3, 2007, all visa applicants, irrespective of nationality, will be required to provide their biometric data when they apply for a visa for the United Kingdom.

To enable visa applicants to do this UKvisas have established an arrangement whereby the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) collect the biometric data of applicants for UK visas from their network of 129 Application Support Centers (ASCs). This arrangement with the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) will provide wide coverage of biometric collection points in the USA.

As of December 3, all UK visa applicants will need to schedule an online appointment to visit one of 129 USCIS Application Support Centers (ASCs) where they will be required to provide their fingerscans and a digital photograph in support of their application.

Unless otherwise advised, all visa applicants must provide their biometric data. The application cannot be processed if an applicant refuses, or cannot provide, acceptable biometric data.

Fingerscans will be collected from each applicant by using an electronic scanner. No ink, liquid or chemical will be used. A digital photograph will be taken at the same time and the whole biometric capture procedure should take no more than 10 minutes to complete.

Note:

All applicants should ensure that their fingertips are free from any forms of decoration (henna, for example), abrasions or other markings, and that any facial cuts and bruises have healed or disappeared prior to providing their biometric data as these may affect their ability to provide acceptable fingerscans and photographs. Digital photographs cannot be taken with applicants wearing head coverings that hide the face, dark glasses, face or neck coverings.

For further information about the application process, visit www.britainusa.com or call the WorldBridge user pay phone service at 1-900-656-5000 ($3.00 per minute) or 212-796-5773 ($12 per call, regardless of length).
